Brows

Key to stay-proof brows is waterproof/water-resistant formulations that won't melt away during the summer heat. Follow with a setting powder to keep product from slipping. Still, for those seriously brow challenged, water-resistant formulas can only do so much. Malynha Vglotti (aka Boom Boom), owner of Boom Boom Brow Bar in New York City, recommends getting a brow tint. "It's a fun summer beauty service for anybody who's trying to achieve bigger, bolder brows," she says. "Plus, you can get away with wearing less makeup, too." And, of course, there's always the microblading/microshading option for brows that will last all summer long.

Skin

First and foremost, applying a broad-spectrum sunscreen is a must—in fact, not just in summer, but daily throughout the year. Protecting skin from the sun's harmful rays will keep it looking fresher and more youthful, which allows for less makeup in general.

Next is skin prep. "This step is very important," says Gabriela Santana-Blackburn, executive director of esthetics at Tricool University of Beauty Culture. "Careful preparation will ensure that makeup application is smoother and stays put throughout the day." Many primers now offer illuminating effects that work double-duty both prepping the skin and imparting a glow.

Finally, keep foundation light, opting for a mineral powder foundation or even a tinted moisturizer; full coverage makeup is simply too heavy during summer. "Keep the skin fresh with a soft BB cream," suggests Stila. "And just use concealer for touchups to allow the skin to breathe." Finish the face with a dusting of bronzer on the high points of the face—even a light dusting across the nose for a sun-kissed effect. "Adding a highlighter to the tops of cheekbones adds a beautiful glow," says Stila. "But stay away from the T-zone, which tends to get oily."
